How to prepare for a RotoSpa

ELECTRICALS

Our full range of RotoSpa's come with a male commando plug attached to a 3m length cable.

For a permanent installation Rotospa recommends that a fully qualified electrician installs a Female Commando socket. This should be between 2-3 meters from the spa with a rotary isolator fitted. You should ensure there is RCD protection on either the main board or in the socket.

Alternatively if you wish you can purchase a conversion lead from us with built in RCD protection which can be used in a standard outdoor 3pin waterproof IP rated socket.

SPA BASE

Ideally your spa will be sited on a professionally laid patio or decking that has been designed to hold the maximum weight of the spa. A concrete base is also suitable but not necessary with a RotoSpa due to the range being so lightweight.

Based on the Dura spa with 5 average adults inside the weight will be 1572kg. This works out to around 5.5 adults per square metre.

Adult weight calculated using a 70kg per adult average

Alternatively, RotoSpa's can be sunk into decking. When sinking a RotoSpa into decking there are things that need to be considered such as: sitting the spa on a patio base or concrete pad, ensuring access around the full perimeter of the spa for future maintenance and servicing purposes. Creating removable decking or an open crawl space under the decking is required.

We would advise against siting the spa on the grass or straight onto soil as this can cause sink-age and water damage to the internal electrical components.
